Is it possible to start a design process without making "forms"?
Is it possible to organize a functional program starting from an objective point of view?
We do believe in a kind of Nonlinear Process that might explore self-organization and evolution starting from the rules of nature.
A new interaction model to create a desirable scenery for potential users, actors who will activate new social, political and cultural dynamics.
A tool that could be used to organize these new kinds of flexible and informal spaces.
So that a large number of subjects could modify functions and forms through a permanent participation process.
